Notice to Contributors

The Review invites the submission of manuscripts which pertain to the relationship between law and contemporary social issues. We regret that such manuscripts cannot be returned except on receipt of postage and handling fees of $2.00.

The Review follows the text and footnote citation rules set forth in A Uniform System of Citation (14th ed. 1986) (the "Blue Book"). For stylistic matters not addressed by the Blue Book, refer to the Chicago Manual of Style (13th ed. 1982).

In order to further the Review's commitment to sex equality, contributors are expected to use female pronouns for the third person singular when the pronoun is used generically.

EDITORS' NOTE

The Review of Law and Social Change is committed to the search for innovative legal solutions to problems of social inequity. The Review was founded in 1969 in order to publish Notes and Articles that deal with issues of law and social policy. Today, the Review remains dedicated to furnishing a forum for the creative thinking, alternative viewpoints, and critical analysis necessary for the promotion of social change. The Review publishes works that reflect a particular interest in the underrepresented or disenfranchised, and whose original analysis provides the groundwork for future practical application.

In addition to publishing the works of students and outside authors, the Review sponsors a Colloquium and a Symposium each year. These semi-annual events, one national and the other regional in scope, have developed a reputation in the legal community for providing an accessible forum for the insightful discussion of controversial legal issues. Papers and panels presented at these events are subsequently published in a separate issue of the Review. The purpose and goal of these events underscore the aims of the Review: to ensure that no issue of social injustice is overlooked merely because it lacks a forum for reasoned public discussion in the legal community, and to provide innovative legal analysis from which practical remedies may be formed.

This Cumulative Index is intended to serve lawyers, scholars, activists and the general public. It represents many years of hard work and commitment. We look forward to many more successful and meaningful years in the cooperative pursuit of social justice.
